Have you heard about the new cigarette? It's called Timesaver. Has a filter on one end - the other end is packed first with instant coffee, then comes toothpaste. Next is a breath purifier and finally some aspirin. You wake up in the morning, light a cigarette, brush your tooth, sweeten your breath and cure a hangover all at the same time.

31/JAN/1964

Reporter: Miss Diller, I hear you have given up cigarettes. What do you do to prevent jitters?

Miss Diller: Well, several things. First when I feel the urge to smoke creeping up I run and collect all the cigarettes in the house and take them to the bathroom and flush it! Then I hid all my shoes. This takes a long time because I have several pair and I divide them up so there are no mates hidden together and they must both be for either the right foot or the left. You may not understand how I do this but it is a system I worked out. Original, you might say. By the time I get this done, I am shaking like a leaf with a gone feeling here (holds stomach) so I run to the refrigerator and stuff myself with left overs - usually hash, then while I am chewing this up I go put all my money in piggy banks or that sort of the bank has the key to, so I won't be tempted to go out barefoot and buy more cigarettes. Next I run out and throw the car keys on top of the house. Then I grab some more to eat, find the scissors and cut the telephone wire so I can't call the neighbors and beg for a smoke. Then I take three aspirin and 5 or 6 tranquilizers. By this time I feel myself slipping away so I have to have several shots of whiskey to bring me out of it. Along about this time my husband comes home for supper and the next thing I remember is lying in a hospital bed where they have pumped out my stomach and I'm screaming like a mad woman for somebody to bring me a cigarette.

Reporter: Would you recommend that addicts like yourself quit smoking?

Diller: O, definitely. It gives you such a feeling of accomplishment!
